Editor's Corner

This month's issue is a potpourri of material and over five pages of ads. We have submissions ranging from Serbian Wedding Customs to the Choreography of Transylvania, and ads that cover German, Swedish, Romanian, Romani and International Music and Dancing.

Thanks to Cheryl Spasojevic for permission to use her article on Serbian wedding customs. You might find it very interesting to compare and contrast Serbian customs with the Rom customs in the last issue.

Also, Richard Duree has contributed another excellent article in his Choreogeography series, This time, the subject is Transylvania, its history, geography, customs and dances. As you read the article, you might find yourself suppressing a desire to jump on the next plane and see the region for yourself.

There will be Romani workshops, concerts and dance parties on Oct. 1 and 2. See page 8 for details.

Finally, Folk Dance Scene is sponsoring Romanian Rendezvous II with Theodor and Lia Vasilescu on Sat. Nov. 20. See page 15 for details. More info next month.

We hope you enjoy this issue.

Dancers Corner

Flora and Harold Codman have taught folk dancing in Santa Barbara since the 1960's and have been recognized leaders in the local dance community. Flora's enthusiasm and dedication to teaching beginners has earned her a reputation throughout the county, and her two weekly beginning/intermediate classes still attract new dancers for every session.

One of their principle passions is to travel, and over the years they have visited the Balkan countries, Eastern Europe, Japan and Israel. And, of course, wherever they travel, they find local groups for dancing and camaraderie.

I remember my first folk dance class in 1974. Flora was teaching Vrtielka Czardas that night, and by the end of the evening, not only had I learned the entire dance, but I couldn't wait to come back again.

Sadly, Flora and Harold are leaving Santa Barbara and moving to Eugene, Oregon. Their loss to the Santa Barbara dance community will be Eugene's gain. We wish them all the best in their new endeavor.

Serbian Wedding Customs

Last month's Scene featured an article about Rom weddings. Here is one about Serbian wedding customs for comparison and contrast.

This article appeared in the July 2004 issue of Northwest Folkdancer, and is reproduced with permission.

SVADBA! A wedding in Serbia

Even in this modern age of computers, cell phones, and big screen TVs, a wedding in a Serbian village follows many of the old traditions. Although marriages are usually no longer arranged, as they were in the past, marriage is still seen as a contract between two families. The bride is not just marrying the groom, but is marrying into the household, since it is still the norm for the young married couple to continue to live with the groom's family. If the girl is an only child and the boy has other brothers, they will usually go to live with the bride's family. So, the characteristics of the marrying couple are carefully considered by their families.

In the past, most weddings were held in the fall, after the harvest was in and before the Christmas Lent began. Now, however, they are held almost any season, but according to Church canon, cannot be held during any of the Lenten fasts of the Orthodox Church. There are four main fasts, each of several weeks duration. For three weeks before the wedding, the bans are read in the church. Traditionally, a couple of weeks before the wedding, a formal betrothal ceremony is held at the church.

A few days before the wedding, the father goes about the village officially inviting the guests. He carries with him a flower-and-ribbon-decorated round wooden brandy flask and ceremoniously offers a sip of sljivovica to the head of the house. He carries with him a woven bag, to which each invited guest pins a small gift, such as a handkerchief or small towel.

On the day of the wedding, the groom's guests gather in the yard of his parent's house, where a big (rented) tent is set up. They are served a light breakfast and drinks before setting off in procession to get the bride. In the past, they would have gone with carriages, with long towels and flowers attached to the horses' bridles. Now the towels and flowers are attached to the windshield wipers of the cars! The procession is led by the vojvoda, wearing a tall conical decorated paper hat, followed or accompanied by the flag bearer, who carries a large Serbian flag extending out the car window. The rest of the procession follows, with much blowing of horns.

When the wedding party reaches the girl's home, they must first 'earn' the right to enter the yard. A tall pole with an apple impaled on the top stands beside the gate. The apple must be shot down before the groom's party can enter the yard. Then the party enters, greeted by live music. They are seated at long tables, where they are served food and drinks. Corsages of rosemary and small artificial flowers, tied with the Serbian tricolor, are pinned onto each guest by the sisters, cousins, and girlfriends of the bride. They receive a few coins in exchange. Gifts are taken to the bride, who remains in the house. She is led out to the accompaniment of gunshots, and put into the care of the best man, who has a white sash tied across his chest and who is her guardian until the marriage ceremony. When the meal is over, they set off for the church.

During the Orthodox wedding service, the bride and groom stand before the priest, along with the godfather and the chief witness. They hold tall candles decorated with flowers. As a part of the ceremony, the bride and groom's hands are tied together. Golden wedding crowns are placed on their heads, and all four people circle the altar three times. They sip ceremonial wine from a golden goblet. The whole service is rather long, as it is a wedding liturgy.

The bride, groom, godfather, witness, and close family members then go to the municipal building to register the marriage. The majority of the guests proceed to the groom's home for the wedding feast. An archway of flowers has been built over the main gate, through which the guests enter, accompanied by music. Again they are seated at long tables under a big tent, where they are served drinks and enjoy the music while waiting for the arrival of the newlyweds. When they arrive, the bride is given a baby boy to kiss three times, to ensure that she will bear sons. She sits in her mother-in-law's lap to show respect and deference to her. Before she can enter the house, she tosses wheat grains in four directions and must throw a round wooden sieve with wheat grains in it onto the roof, to bring fertility and prosperity to the household. Then the wedding feast begins. The newlyweds and their immediate families are seated at the head table. There are numerous toasts to the young couple. A large round loaf of bread is carried from guest to guest, each of whom places money on it as a gift to the newlyweds. The main dish is always roast pig, often plus roast lamb. Wedding sauerkraut (svadbarski kupus) is also traditional. There are many courses, and the feast goes on for many hours. Music is played almost constantly, and kolo dancing winds between the tables. When it is time for dessert, in addition to the wedding cake, many of the women guests have brought a cake also, which is incorporated into the dessert course.

The bride and groom retire into the house, but the celebration may go on for many more hours. The next day, the party continues for the closer relatives, who return for more feasting. The two families now become 'friends' (prijatelj), a close relationship of respect and friendship.

These customs are even followed in most city weddings, but perhaps in a somewhat abbreviated form. However, the Serbian wedding traditions are very much alive and strong, and are an important part of Serbian folklore.

— Cheryl Spasojevic

Choreogeography of Transylvania

Few places in the Western World are as storied as Transylvania. Americans are particularly ill-informed about this beautiful region, recalling only a vague reference to an evil Count Dracula, whoever he was. For those of us who know a bit more about Europe, we know it is the ancient home of the Hungarians, now a major region of Romania and the subject of intense folkloric study.

Europe's checkered and confusing history did not neglect Transylvania, as the present population can attest. A mixture of Hungarians and Romanians exists with an uneasy tolerance in a land with its feudal roots still very evident. Small isolated villages, connected by wandering dirt roads, are populated by one or another of the two ethnic groups, rarely mixed, and the ethnicity is evident in every detail from the village names to the rooflines of the peasant cottages.

In the 10th Century, seven Magyar tribes arrived in Transylvania at the end of a long migration from the steppes of Asia through the Danube Valley over the Transylvanian Alps (thus the name: Trans = across, sylvan = forests). Under the leadership of the leader we know as Atilla the Hun, these nomadic horse people settled in the valleys of Transylvania and eventually spread westward to occupy the Hungarian Basin. For a thousand years, Transylvania remained a major region of the Hungarians as they became a part of the old Austro-Hungarian Empire.

Within the lifetime of many living today, the spoils of war took this treasured place from the Hungarians and gave it to neighboring Romania. The resulting repopulation upheavals and political suppression are well-known. As Romanians moved into Transylvania, place names were changed and many were deported. The entire Saxon population around Hermanstadt was expelled, destroying an entire culture in the process.

Walter Starkey, in his book Raggle Taggle, tells of meeting a strange little man on his travels in Transylvania in the late 1920s, who claimed to be the fabled Pied Piper of Hamelin. He claimed to have brought the children to Hermanstadt where they still lived, tall, fair and blonde in a nation of dark-haired Romanians and Hungarians.

Transylvania is a beautiful land of mountains and valleys, green meadows and dark forests. Its remote sheltered location ensured minimal influence by either the Ottomans or Western Europe, allowing a rather undisturbed, organic folkloric development. Saxons, Hungarians, and Romanians each maintained their particular identities, yet combined in a natural interaction to create an extremely rich, identifiable Transylvanian culture.

Hungarian regions roughly divided Transylvania into Mezőség in the north centered around Club (formerly Kaloszvar), Székelyföld in the east and Kalotaszeg in the east and south. A third group, the Csángós, of Székely stock, live outside any of these regions in the high Transylvanian Alps and in Moldavia to the east.

The folk arts of dance, costume, music, furniture, architecture, pottery and wood carving are well developed and carefully preserved. The dance is highly organized and contains both archaic and modern dance forms among both Hungarians and Romanians. Interesting comparisons may be observed between the two, in the competitive seriousness of the Hungarians, with even rhythms and complex syncopations and the Romanian's more group-oriented performance of highly complex rhythms.

Dance cycles generally begin with highly regulated men's dances with an amazing array of athletic figures, followed by a slow, then fast couple dance, equally rich in figures characterized by rapidly spinning figures for the women. In some regions the differences between the Hungarian and Romanian dance is slight, while in others it is quite evident in both figures and rhythms.

The Csángós of the Gyimex Pass and Moldavia reveal even older forms, preserved in regions not influenced by the more modern Hungarian culture. Indeed, their dance traditions have been adopted from Moldavian and Romanian dance forms, giving them a more Balkan flavor with chain dances dominating.

The Székely of eastern Transylvania are unique even among the Hungarians, having been granted special privileges, such as the right to own land and freedom from taxation by the Hapsburgs in exchange for acting as border guards against the Ottomans just over the mountains. The Széklers to this day proudly maintain their separate identity, having adopted more modern dance motifs into their repertoire.

Many ethnologists have dedicated their entire lives to the study of one small region of Transylvanian dance and folklore. It's story would fill volumes and is still an endless reservoir of folk art treasures. As it becomes modernized in the near future, much of that folklore will naturally disappear. Folklorists and ethnologists are frantically studying the region to save as much as possible of this priceless heritage and those of us who study the dance are richer for it. To many of us, it is the ultimate dance.

DANIELA & ANGEL AT CALTECH FOLKDANCERS

Recently CalTech Folkdancers had Daniela Ivanova and Angel Nazimov (pictured above) playing for us. We asked only for music, no teaching, because I was informed that they had enough material for 10 hours of dancing.

In spite of very limited advertising, we had a great crowd. As a bonus Joe Moier and Ian Price also played at the break. This duo has played for our mid-evening many times, and want to make it a monthly event. Ian also accompanied on tupan for the first half of the evening. Joe plays gaida and is improving constantly.

The dances that were the most enjoyed by the dancers were of the 'strolling' variety. Something for everyone in the village of all abilities - not too fast or flashy, just to have a good time dancing. Yes, there were a few dances for the village hot-shots; a faster beat with more complex steps. Many people commented on how the music was more fun to listen to.

The second half of the evening Joe Carson accompanied on drum, giving a different but similar feel. Daniela was the leader and singer most of the evening, though occasionally giving the lead to an obviously competent dancer, so she could play a flute or kaval. Daniela led a Thracian dance with many hand movements; not exactly easy, but a good dance.

We will have Miamon Miller playing for us in October.

– Nancy Milligan.

KYPSELI'S GLENDI PARTY

Kypseli, the Greek Dance Center, had a very special evening on Friday June 4. Sophie Poster hosted the evening with a birthday Glendi. She provided the Middle Eastern feast, and remembering many of her friends, she made sure there were some special vegetarian dishes that every one could enjoy.

The live music was great - she had friends of all ages play. There was a gypsy set of musicians, Bulgarian and Thracian. The UCLA Balkan Band played more true Bulgarian leaving some of the Kypseli people wondering what it was. But most enjoyed listening, if not dancing.

Next came a zurna set played on Turkish-style zurnas. This was wonderful for two reasons. First, we rarely have the chance to hear live zurnas played, and played well (Hector, one of the players was especially good). Second, these were Turkish zurnas, and even harder to have a chance to hear live or otherwise.

This event gave us a chance to celebrate Sophie and her life while we still have her, unlike many times when we wait until our friends are gone

– Nancy Milligan

Voice of Roma ~ Voice of Hope

Voice of Roma sponsors Esmá Redžepova in Voice of Hope Tour

Esmá Redžepova (ESS-mah Reh-JEP-oh-vah) is internationally acclaimed as "the Queen of Romani Song." Known to her devoted audiences simply as "Esmá," she was born in Skopje, Republic of Macedonia, in Shutka, the largest Romani neighborhood in Europe, in which song, music and folklore are part of everyday life and family tradition. Esmá began her long professional career in Macedonia at the age of 13. She was the first Balkan performer to make Romani music popular with non-Rom audiences and was one of the first female performers to sing on the radio and TV in the former Yugoslavia. As Jordan Levin wrote in the Miami Herald, "...Redžepova's rich, magnificent voice, sobbing in a song of mourning or swelling to a dramatic crescendo, was genuine and infectious."

Esmá was nominated twice for the Nobel Peace Prize, in 2002 and 2003, for her work with the Romani refugees from former Yugoslavia.

The "Voice of Hope" Tour is produced in order to counteract the stereotype of the mythologized "Gypsy" and to tell the story of the largest ethnic group in Europe (close to 10 million Roma), as well as to raise funds for the work of the California based organization Voice of Roma. For more information, please check our web-site: www.voiceofroma.com.

CRUISE WITH BEVERLY AND IRWIN BARR

We are doing it again, Nov. 8-12, 2004 (Monday - Friday). A repeat of our wonderful 4 day folk dancing cruise that we enjoyed so much last year. We had such a great time that many of the same people are joining us again this year. This time we will cruise on the Paradise Cruise Ship out of Long Beach, at a fabulous discounted price. This ship is new to the west coast.

For more information or to reserve a cabin, please call (310) 202-6166.

DUNAJ FOLK ENSEMBLE NEWS

September and October are the busiest months for Dunaj, with performances at both public and private Oktoberfests. Dunaj has been active in Southern California Oktoberfests for over 20 years.

We'd like to invite everyone to join us on September 19 and October 31 at Alpine Village in Torrance with performances at 3:00 and 5:00 p.m.

On Saturday, September 25, we're at the Beaumont Oktoberfest from 6:00 to 9:00 p.m., with dancing to the Villagers. This is the best one for dancing, with a nice large dance floor and great dance able live music. Info: (909) 845-9555 or bcvrpd@earthlink.net.

Dunaj has produced its 'Ecos del Fandango' reenactment of an Early California fandango for several years now. Richard and Ruth are training the members of the Living History Society of Mission San Juan Capistrano in the performance of Early California dance. The society will be adding Ecos del Fandango to their monthly Living History Days on the second Saturday of each month. A full-size fandango is in planning stages. We are very pleased with the enthusiasm and dedication of this fine group of history buffs. They're just like folk dancers.

We have an enormous collection of costumes, costume parts, Vintage dresses and gowns and more that are beginning to crowd us out of the house. In coming months, we will take inventory to decide what we need to keep for future performances and what can be sold or contributed to other groups. If you're interested in a particular costume or costume pieces, send an e-mail: r.duree@worldnet.att.net and we'll see if we have it. We'll post an inventory in the next couple of months.

CAMP HESS KRAMER CAMPS REVIEW

Our plans for the 2004 Camp Hess Kramer Workshop Weekend are moving along well. We want to make this 20th Anniversary weekend a very special and memorable event. It will be a combination of all of the teachers and the dancers that will make it happen.

During the last 20 years we have had many wonderful teachers at our weekends. Many of our alumni teachers will again be with us this year, to teach and dance and party with us. We are looking forward to a reunion of our terrific teachers and our most important people, you, the folk dancers, who attend.

The teachers who have already confirmed for our 20th Anniversary Weekend are (alphabetically) Shlomo Bachar, Beverly Barr, Joyce Clyde, Alexandru David, Gary & Jane Diggs, Richard Duree, David Edery, Denise Heenan, Dick Julian, Lu Sham, and Loui Tucker. More of the alumni teacher's names will be added as they are confirmed.

Save this date, Oct. 29-30-31, 2004. Camp Hess Kramer is located in beautiful Malibu, California and will be a very popular place to be for this special 20th Anniversary Workshop Weekend. Come and enjoy

FOLK DANCING ALIVE AND WELL IN CROATIA.

Folk dancing is alive and well in Croatia. We just got back from our month long vacation in Croatia and Italy. Thanks to Yves Moreau, I contacted Rajka Veverka in Zagreb, and arranged to join their folk dance group in Zagreb. They meet every Thursday at 6:00 PM in a small hall near the main market and dance the same dances we all do here.

The place they dance in is very small, but their high spirit expands the space to no limits. Dancing with them was a highlight of our trip.

I told them about the dancing in California, and they extended their invitation to anyone visiting Zagreb. If any one is interested, I will be happy to get you in touch with Rajka. Regards,

– Lou Pechi
